“The Lord your God, who goes before you, will himself fight for you, just as he took your part before your very eyes in Egypt, as well as in the desert, where you saw how the Lord, your God, carried you, as a man carries his child, all along your journey until you arrived at this place”

How Our Immigration System Unjustly Affects Fathers and Their Families

In November 2014, President Obama announced executive actions that promised changes to deportation policies. While the creation of the Deferred Action for Parents of Americans and Lawful Permanent Residents (DAPA) and expansion of the Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals (DACA) programs have received the most attention and have been postponed due to a lawsuit, other executive actions were also announced, including guidance on the use of Prosecutorial Discretion which the administration has full authority to implement.

The Prosecutorial Discretion memo set priorities for enforcement actions, including situations in which individuals should not be deported. Factors to be considered include "length of time in the United States; military service; family or community ties in the United States; status as a victim, witness or plaintiff in civil or criminal proceedings; or compelling humanitarian factors such as poor health, age, pregnancy, a young child, or a seriously ill relative," as well as extenuating circumstances involving any past offenses.

Despite these policies, local ICE offices are refusing to provide Prosecutorial Discretion and the Obama Administration is still deporting dads, moms, and members of our families, congregations and communities.

Examples include:

- Pastor Max Villatoro, father of four U.S. citizen children, who was deported in March 2015
- Jose Juan Federico Moreno, father of five U.S. citizen children, is living in sanctuary inside University Church because requests for prosecutorial discretion for his case have been repeatedly denied
- Many Uch, who entered the U.S. as a refugee from Cambodia in 1984, father and husband, who ended up in automatic deportation proceedings with no judicial review because Congress passed unjust laws in 1996 that applied retroactively to him
- Al Samuels, who was separated from his wife and three U.S. citizen children and held for 5 months in an immigration detention center before his family and his church, Shepherd Park Christian Church, were able to advocate for his release
Understanding
Prosecutorial Discretion

- In all of these cases, these individuals’ families, friends, congregation members and communities actively and powerfully petitioned for them to be released, for their deportations to be stopped. Some of these efforts have been successful in urging ICE to exercise Prosecutorial Discretion. However, it should not take months of gathering letters of support and appealing to all levels of the government for cases to receive Prosecutorial Discretion. The November 2014 guidance says that Prosecutorial Discretion should be exercised “at all stages of the enforcement process - from the earliest investigative stage to enforcing final orders of removal”
- The failure of ICE to utilize Prosecutorial Discretion in these cases and thousands of others demonstrate the need for additional training, oversight and accountability mechanisms to hold local ICE officers and attorneys accountable who fail to adhere to administrative guidance.
- We’re calling on the administration to improve oversight of local ICE office to make sure that Prosecutorial Discretion is being used as much and as early as possible, so that individuals like Pastor Max, Jose Juan, Many, Al and others don’t have to go through months of family separation, detention and deportation. For Prosecutorial Discretion to effectively function as an administrative policy, it must be utilized with formal and affirmative documentation, inclusive identification and prioritization of equities, and rigorous oversight.
Social and Historical Context

Families in the Torah were close-knit with strong feelings of family loyalty. The administration of Biblical covenants included a principle of familial inclusion, which became a core value used as a metaphor for a relationship with God. Steadfast love was the basis of the familial covenant, which created a sense of loyalty, justice, and high regard for one another. In the Torah, family has the purposes of reproduction, instruction, care giving, maintaining traditions, and conveying wisdom. For the biblical family, steadfast love was the heart of loyalty and solidarity. Covenants included all family relationships and have helped maintain the identity of the biblical family through today.

The Torah

Abraham and Isaac: The story of Abraham and Isaac shows the value that God places on family. Abraham is asked to sacrifice his only son, the most important thing in his life. The surest test of Abraham’s loyalty to the Lord is sacrificing his son. When Abraham shows his obedience, the Lord spares his son and blesses him with plentiful descendants. Family is the risk and family is the reward. (Genesis 22: 1-19)

Joseph and his Brothers: The story of Joseph, whose brothers violated the code of family covenant by selling him into slavery, shows the importance of forgiveness and family unity overcoming past wrongs. When Joseph rises to political power in Egypt, he is reunited with his brothers and accepts not only his own family into Egypt, but the entire tribe of Israel, so that they can escape the famine in the land of Canaan. (Genesis 37-50)

Ruth and Naomi: This well-known story highlights the relationship between mother-in-law and daughter-in-law. When Ruth was widowed, she pledged her loyalty to her mother-in-law, Naomi, who had Ruth migrate with her to Bethlehem to help her re-establish herself in a new land. With the assistance of Naomi, Ruth began to work in the fields and was able to eventually marry the landowner wherein she became the great-grandmother to David. The current U.S. immigration system would not recognize the familial relationship between this mother and her daughter-in-law. (Ruth 1 and 2)

Familial Bonds Are Central to Our Religious Traditions

Christian Texts

Mary and Jesus: The relationship between Mary and Jesus throughout his life and especially at the time of his death points to the interconnectedness of familial strength and the fluidity of family relationships. Mary's courage in the Immaculate Conception showed the dedication and strength of motherhood that continued throughout Jesus' ministry. Jesus clearly extended his understanding of the family model to include all of his disciples. Each individual is not independent, but rather interconnected and interdependent. This points to how crucial it is to refrain from limiting the definition of family and the power that parents play in the lives of their adult children and vice-versa. (John 19:25-27)

Mary and Martha: The story of Mary and Martha displays the reliance that adult siblings can have on one another. Mary and Martha give one another mutual and diverse support. Martha welcomes Jesus into their home, which is an important action for Jesus and Mary's relationship. Martha points out that she needs Mary to help her do her work, exhibiting how adult siblings can depend on one another. Mary, however, is able to most fully understand and appreciate Jesus' presence; thereby teaching Martha an important lesson. The interdependence and wisdom that blossoms from these adult sisters' relationship is one so powerful that they are mentioned by name in multiple places in scripture. (Luke 10:38-42)

The Twelve Disciples: At least half of the twelve disciples were brothers and many more siblings were part of the larger following of Jesus. Jesus calls two pairs of brothers to follow him in his ministry. The first thing that Andrew does after he meets Jesus is share the news with his brother, Simon Peter, and together they become disciples of Jesus. The dependence and support between siblings is apparent in the story of James and John. They are fisherman together and followers of Jesus together. Jesus finds them fishing and asks that they follow him. This decision is a joint venture between the brothers. They are reliant on one another’s support and trust themselves to follow Jesus together. Jesus does not collect one sibling and leave the other behind. He shows the value of sibling relationships by inviting both to follow him. As more disciples gather there is a sense that the family structure is extended to all followers, as sisters and brothers.—(Matthew 4:18–22 and 10:1-4; Mark 2:14 and 3:16-19; Luke 6:12-16; John 1:35-42)

The Unjust 1996 Laws and Impacts of Detention and Deportation on Families

1996 Immigration Laws: Automatic Injustice

Congress passed two laws in 1996 – the Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act (AEDPA) and the Illegal Immigration Reform and Immigrant Responsibility Act (IIRIRA) – that made it much more likely that immigrants with criminal convictions could be deported. Together, they greatly expanded the number and types of crimes that lead to automatic deportation to include lower-level offenses and nonviolent crimes, created fast tracks to deportation that bypassed seeing an immigration judge, put many more immigrants in detention facilities while they fight their cases, without the option for release and increased cooperation between Immigration and Customs Enforcement and local police.

And yet again and again, U.S. courts have found that pulling families apart brings great detriment upon children and parents—and upon all our communities. As examples, we remember:

“Families and relationships between family members occupy a place of central importance in our nation’s history and are a fundamental part of the values which underlie our society.”

(Richland Park Homeowners Ass’n v. Pierce, 671 F.2d 935, 943. 5th Cir. 1982.)

“Separation of the alien from family living in the United States” has been deemed the “most important single factor” that can establish extreme hardship for a family.”

(Mejia-Carrillo v. U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service, 656 F.2d 520, 522. 9th Cir. 1981.)

“The trauma caused to an immigrant family when a member is detained is also immense; exacerbated as immigrants are often transported on average 370 miles, and are frequently sent to multiple locations. Such movement leads to further isolation from relatives, and often from legal services, as well.”

(Seth Wessler, Applied Research Ctr., Shattered Families: The Perilous Intersection of Immigration Enforcement and the Child Welfare System)

A heartbreaking letter that Al Samuels’ young daughter Aubrey sent him after he had been picked up by ICE - (Samuels’ full story on pages 12-13).

It is me your princess Aubrey.

I am so sorry that you left on Thursday.

When you left I cried so much tears were dropping down my eye. Where the men took you somewhere, where I do not know.

I miss you so much dad.

Daddy, I miss you taking me to school and picking me up from school everyday.

Faith, Family Unity, and Impacts of Detention and Deportation on Faith Communities

Faith Commitments to Family Unity

Faith communities place high priority upon the crucial values of steadfast love, lived in covenant commitments and mutual care for one another through familial relationships. Our sacred texts constantly call us into relationships of care between Abraham and Isaac, Joseph and his brothers, Ruth and Naomi, Mary and Jesus, Martha and Mary, and the Twelve Disciples.

Impacts of Detention and Deportation on Faith Communities

Thus, immigrant detention and deportation often pose heartaches and hardships for faith communities as well, resulting in confusion about where to locate members, why they were removed without warning, and how to assist remaining family members to maintain contact.

And far too often, the detention and deportation of immigrants from our communities leaves great gaps in congregational leadership. Pastor Max Villatoro’s local church was left without a pastor when he was deported in March. Indeed, his whole denomination, and many others with similar cases like them, are feeling the pain.

“Pastor Max Villatoro’s case and recent deportation has brought to the forefront that undocumented people are part of our church. And not only that, they are mothers, fathers, pastors, and important members of their local communities.”

—(Iris De León-Hartshorn, Director of Transformative Peacemaking for Mennonite Church USA)

“Ruben and his wife would be our Associate Pastors, if he were not now in detention.”

Max Villatoro: Pastor, Community Leader, Husband & Father

Max Villatoro, Pastor of Iglesia Menonita Torre Fuerte (First Mennonite Church) in Iowa City, came to the U.S. in 1994 and, for a time, had a temporary legal status but later lost this due to bad legal advice. He subsequently tried for several years to legalize his status, with the help of the Central Plains Mennonite Conference. Pastor Max has been a leader in his community, and his four children—Anthony, Edna, Angela, and Aileen—are U.S. citizens. His convictions, for trying to obtain a driver’s license with false identification and DUI, were more than 15 years in the past and do not represent the man he is now.

Not only does Pastor Max eschew alcohol use for himself, he helps others who struggle with addictions. His positive impact on the community in Iowa City was illustrated by the thousands who rallied to his side during his detention, including more than 40,000 who signed petitions calling for his release. Pastor Max’s relatives in Honduras have been victims of murder, assault and threats due to ongoing violence there.

Unfortunately, he was deported to Honduras on March 20, 2015. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) sent Pastor Max away from his wife and children, his church and the country where he has lived for the past 20 years.

Sadly, Pastor Max is not alone. He was caught in a series of ICE raids dubbed “Operation Cross Check” the week of March 2 which picked up more than 2,000 individuals. Though ICE has said they are deporting the “worst of the worst” criminals, in fact, nearly half of those picked up had only misdemeanor convictions. Another quarter had immigration-related convictions. Many, like Max, had been in the U.S. for decades and leave behind families and communities who are devastated by their loss.

Jose Juan Federico Moreno: Father of Five Living in Sanctuary

Jose Juan Federico Moreno is a father of five living in Chicago, IL. His children are all between the ages of 2 and 14 years old.

Jose Juan is exactly the type of person that should qualify for relief by the Deferred Action for Parents of Americans (DAPA) program in order to remain with his family and continue to provide for them. However, in 2009 Jose Juan was convicted of a DUI, a first time offense which resulted in no injuries or property damage. Since Illinois does not allow drivers’ licenses for undocumented citizens, his DUI was classified as "aggravated".

DHS has full discretion over whether to consider it a significant factor for their enforcement priorities, or for his qualification for DAPA. Jose Juan took responsibility for his actions in 2009 by paying all fees and attending classes. The Chicago ICE office however placed Jose Juan in deportation proceedings; even the judge in his hearing recognized that his deportation would cause hardship and undue suffering for his children. Jose Juan is now living in sanctuary in the University Church in Chicago while he pleads with ICE to delay his deportation for the sake of his family.

"Abandoning my children is not a choice I can make. I live for them, and I will fight to stay with them."

Many Uch: Impacted by the Unjust 1996 Laws

Many Uch entered the US as a refugee, but has been fighting his deportation for over 20 years. He moved to Seattle, WA. after initially resettling in 1984 to Richmond, VA. Once in Seattle, gangs in his new neighborhood lured him to join them when he was barely 14, and he served in juvenile detention.

Then in 1994, when he was eighteen, Many was caught driving the getaway car during a robbery and spent three years in prison. He pled guilty to all charges, not wanting to take a plea in exchange for “snitching” on his friends. He did not know that this guilty plea would later guarantee his deportation.

In 1996, Congress passed retroactive laws that made a conviction like his grounds for automatic deportation without judicial review. As a lawful permanent resident who had not yet naturalized, Many became deportable overnight. Many talks about the steps that led to his incarceration, from the film, "Sentenced Home".

While he was in prison, Many began to read books, teach himself immigration and criminal law, and take community college courses. He participated in an Asian American cultural group and mentored younger inmates. He learned to read and speak Khmer, the Cambodian language, and performed religious ceremonies in the prison.

Many likewise is a proud husband and father, and is a dedicated mentor and a nationally recognized advocate. In 2010, Many was granted a pardon by Washington State Governor Chris Gregoire, and in 2016 he was appointed to serve on the Washington Statewide Reentry Council for others who have been incarcerated. However, the 1996 laws that made his deportation automatic meant that this pardon and his government service do not necessarily cancel his deportation. In the eyes of US immigration law, he remains on “the list” to be deported to Cambodia, and is still considered a “criminal alien.” He does not know if or when he could be taken from his wife and young daughters.

Al Samuels: Father, Church Leader, Husband

My name is Al Samuels and I have been a member at Shepherd Park Christian Church for 6 years in Washington, DC. I am originally from Jamaica and moved the US as a child. I am also proud to have served in the U.S. Marine Corps on active duty for four years and on reserve duty for another four years. From November 15, 2012 to April 4, 2013, I was detained by US Immigration and Customs Enforcement in the Worcester County Detention Center in Salisbury, MD.

For five months, I was separated from my loving wife and our 3 kids – all US citizens – wondering whether I would be deported. I lived in fear and pain with my fellow immigrant brothers in detention wondering if my family would be split forever. During this difficult time, the only thing I knew to do was to turn to God and to my fellow brothers in the detention facility.

There were a couple religious groups within my block – but we were mostly split by race, ethnicity and language. But we were all in the same situation. In my particular block, we were 32 men of different backgrounds – but predominantly Latinos and Africans. And it would be safe to say, the groups did not always get along. We would fight over what we would call the three Ts – the tiny Television, the Telephone, and the Tables where we would sit around.

We had official worship services on Saturday mornings that were offered by local pastors, and we also had informal prayer meetings in individual cells. The Latino religious group would meet on Sunday mornings while the remaining detainees watched sports on the television. We were separate. One day, I was talking with one of my Latino brothers and we came to the conclusion that our groups should start to pray and fast together, especially as the Easter season approached. And over the course of 2 weeks, our whole block started to fast. We had 28 of 32 guys praying, singing, worshipping, fasting and skipping meals together. The racial divide and tension immediately disappeared. We were no longer fighting over resources. We were unified in solidarity together through this spiritual action. The warden was shocked. The guards and watch commanders were shocked. They couldn’t believe the miracle that they saw in front of their eyes as we unified together. They said we needed to get more groups to do this in the facility.
Al Samuels: Vindicated and Released

I believe that the differences that we overcame in detention are no different than that of our American society – or the divisions in American politics. I am living proof that when people of faith come together – and pray and fast in solidarity – that circumstances can change even when the odds are against you. I believe that we can find peace, harmony, and reconciliation in America. I believe this is what our country urgently needs. I love this country, and I am proud to have served overseas in the US military. I feel blessed to have been given the chance to remain here in the US where I can continue to be a father to my kids and husband to my loving and supportive wife. Staying in the US also gave me the opportunity to earn my Master's of Education from Concordia University in Curriculum and Instruction: Ethics, Equity and Justice. My thesis was entitled, "Understanding the Achievement Gap and Educational Attainment: A Holistic Approach.

But, I know there are so many more in detention and millions who have been deported who were not so fortunate. We don't need more of the pain and suffering brought on by the detention and deportations of mothers and fathers. We need for ICE to implement the President's memo that encourages them to NOT detain and deport persons who are not a danger to this society, and we need compassionate reform to our nation's immigration system. Thank you for the opportunity to share my story and I hope that it may bring hope and joy to many. But most importantly, may it bring about change.

“My life and profession have been spent offering words and an ethos that second chances are not deserved, such favor is grace. Grace can be offered by the most unanticipated institutions and communities toward the most unimaginable recipients—grace is judgment saturated with mercy.”

A Prayer for Fathers on Father's Day

God, Father of us all, we pray with loving gratitude for our dads, living and deceased.

We pray especially for the many fathers who have been separated from their families by U.S. deportation policies, and for those dads who fear being deported.

We pray for children who cry at night for their dads, youths who miss the strength and love their dads offer, and mothers who struggle to provide for them.

We pray that our country’s shameful practices of detention and deportation that separate fathers from their families may soon be ended, so that families may be whole again.

While we pray to you, Father God, we also renew our commitment to work for an end to separation of immigrant families.

Amen.

Devotion: Camp Tales From Moses

“The Lord your God…will fight for you, just as he did for you in Egypt…and in the wilderness…where you saw…God carried you, as a father carries a child, all the way that you traveled.”—Deuteronomy 1:30-31

Warm weather seasons remind many families of camping stories; tales of fish caught, meals grilled, storms endured, mosquitos fought. For our ancient Hebrew faith family in the book of Deuteronomy, “camp tales” shared on the edge of the Promised Land included a review of God's presence with them throughout history. Camping there—on the plain of Moab, after decades of journeying sometimes forward and sometimes backwards in obedience and faith—the Israelites were reminded they had NEVER been separated from God. Their journey started with promises to their ancestors in Egypt. It was delayed as they suffered as slaves in Egypt. It re- commenced when they escaped as refugees. It at points veered off track as they wandered and complained, in the desert.

But as Moses took great care to remind them as they encamped at the climax of their decades- long odyssey, God in every moment went BEFORE them. Not many gathered by their tents and listening to Moses would likely have been on the full 40 years of their ancestors' journey. A few elders may have experienced every hope and every challenge through the years since the granting of the Mosaic Law on Mount Sinai. Parents likely held in their hearts some stories of “promises made” and trust fractured en route. The youngest kids may not have known much about previous battles fought or grumblings along the way.

The message Moses gave to unify them all for entry into their futures ahead, though, was to remember that God would FIGHT for them in the eras before, even as God had rescued them from Pharaoh in Egypt; against all odds, ensuring that love conquered over political power to thwart or enslave them. And, to ensure they would forever feel confident that no future threats could overcome them, Moses reminded God’s people how God CARRIED THEM like a father upholds a beloved child to seek their safety, protect them, and deliver them to a secure place.

Moses’ “campfire message” to the Israelites is “a law that delivers”; restoring hope, reducing fear, assuring protection and comfort. For today’s immigrants, and advocates who seek to support them, it offers an encouragement to work for laws within our own nation which offer the same values of assurance.

Prosecutorial discretion is intended to reinforce just those values. In the story of immigrant and community leader Al Samuels, Pastor Marcus Leathers offered this testimony to the courts, on behalf of his church leader then detained: “My life and profession have been spent offering words and an ethos that second chances are not deserved, (but rather) such favor is ‘grace.’ Grace can be offered by the most unanticipated institutions and communities toward the most unimaginable recipients—grace is judgment saturated with mercy….I pray that (my detained church member) might benefit from an act of mercy executed by our courts.”

In the flicker of the campfire, and spoken in the flickering last month of his long life—Moses likewise called God’s people then to remember God’s constant outpouring of grace. And so we hear his call now that we, too, might offer such grace now to those encamped as migrants among us— including through support for prosecutorial discretion.

Urge President Obama and Secretary Johnson to Stop Deporting Dads!

President Obama and Secretary Johnson,

Happy Father’s Day! Like you, we are fathers too. Like you, our faith is of fundamental importance, and guides our values. However, on this special day for dads we write to you with heavy hearts for immigrant fathers whose families are being unjustly torn apart by our broken immigration system.

Each of us will likely have the opportunity to embrace our children on Father’s Day, to play with our children, or celebrate with them over a meal. In contrast immigrant fathers and their children who are marginalized by our country’s immoral deportation and immigration detention systems will face yet another day of fear, loneliness, and hopelessness.

President Obama, despite the announcement of your executive actions in November 2014 that promised changes to deportation policies, your Administration is still deporting family members, including dads.

In March 2015, Max Villatoro, a church pastor and father of four U.S. citizen children, was deported. Max will not be with his children on Father’s Day.

Many Uch is a father who entered the U.S. as a refugee from Cambodia in 1984. Many ended up in automatic deportation proceedings with no judicial review because Congress passed unjust laws in 1996 that applied retroactively to him. He lives in fear that he will be taken away from his wife and daughters every day, including this Father’s Day.

Jose Juan Federico Moreno, a long term resident of Chicago, dedicated husband and father of five U.S. born children, is living in sanctuary inside University Church because requests for prosecutorial discretion of his DUI charge continue to be denied. His charge was listed as “aggravated” just because he was not allowed by law to have access to a driver’s license. Jose Juan does not have the freedom to celebrate freely with his children on Father’s Day.

In light of the realities faced by these dads and thousands of others, we ask you take the following actions:

- The White House must ensure that local Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) offices are implementing the administration’s stated policies of prosecutorial discretion. It’s clear from these stories of dads and thousands more that ICE is repeatedly violating the prosecutorial discretion policies announced in November 2014.
- The Department of Homeland Security must train, monitor, and hold local ICE offices accountable to utilizing prosecutorial discretion whenever possible to stop deporting dads and tearing apart families.
- The fact that dads are parents and active members of their communities must be weighed against any past mistakes they have made. Our faiths teach us that we are called to forgive and our communities are to be places of redemption and wholeness.

President Obama and Secretary Johnson, I am sure we can agree that our children are our greatest asset. The children of deported and detained fathers need to be with their dads. We implore you to do everything in your power in the coming weeks and months to make this possible.

Sincerely,
Undersigned Dads & Supporters Who are Not Fathers
